

Capsule Summary
SM-724
Trossbach House
Dameron Vicinity
Private

c. 1910

Following an agricultural rebuilding trend that occurred in St. Mary's County during the early twentieth century, the Trossbach House was constructed circa 1910. The two story frame house with a distinctive cross gable is surrounded by flat cultivated fields and accompanied by a number of agricultural buildings that include tobacco barns, cattle barn, and cribs. The relationships between all of these buildings with the landscape adequately recalls the increased interest in diversifying agricultural products during the period thus retaining a moderate to high level of historical integrity. The house as well as the agricultural outbuildings deserve further documentation.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Positioned in the middle of a broad flat plain of cultivated fields stands the Trossbach House. Located at the northern terminus of Trossbach Road near Dameron, Maryland, the house is approached via a dirt farm road that proceeds east to a number of agricultural buildings and then curving northward again to the main house. The house is bounded by a number of mature trees as well as a non-contributing metal shed or workshop situated just north of the house. The surveyor was previously denied access to the property, so photography and observations were taken from the distant public road.

The house itself is a two-story frame house probably erected circa 1910. The primary or south elevation is entered through a centrally located door and is fenestrated by a number of what appear one-over-one, double-hung sash windows. All of these bays are sheltered by a wrap-around shed roof porch that is embellished with a balustrade. The balustrade is interrupted only by the main entrance on the south and west. The second floor of the south elevation is pierced by three symmetrically placed windows of similar sash. The middle window is emphasized by a cross gable that interrupts the raised-seam metal gable roof.

A number of agricultural outbuildings are located on the property. These include at least two tobacco barns, a gambrel roofed dairy/cattle/hay barn, and two cribs. Some are located well to the northeast of the house in the fields, while the others are situated astride the main drive. These buildings as well as the main house deserve further recordation.
